Examples of content that's WILD

A British Intelligence decrypt of a plan to assassinate Adolf Hitler in 1939.

The Story of South Africa, a propaganda film released in 1965 by the apartheid regime.

NGO research detailing the presence of PFAs in water sources around textile factories in Bangladesh (2024).

The problem is urgent . . .

“We need to massively externalize (archive) collections in order to build a library and archives that is truly of the web, by the web, and for the web”

Christian Dupont

Librarian, Boston College, founder of Aeon

“$20Bn of research from business, organizations, and government is invisible to the academy”

Amanda Lawrence

Research Fellow, Open Knowledge Systems at RMIT University

Which is why we're giving PIDs to WILD content

Germany: Plots against Hitler

30 Apr 1945

Read Cite Add to list Share

A file of press cuttings and interrogation reports concerning assassination plots against Adolf Hitler. The documents include a press cutting covering the July 1944 bomb plot; a summary of the events of the plot by Dr H.B. Gisevius, a member of the German anti-Nazi resistance; and a report of a conversation between the head of the German military intelligence service, Admiral Wilhelm Canaris, and a German interrogator, discussing his interrogations of Georg Elser, who carried out the 1939 Munich beer hall bombing, and the captured British agent Major Stevens...

Persistent Threat: PFAS in Textiles and Water in Bangladesh

29 May 2024

View Cite Add to list Share Edit

This report reveals high levels of toxic PFAS chemicals in nearly all surface and tap water samples collected near industrial areas that are centers of the textiles industry throughout and around Dhaka, Bangladesh. The water analyses showed PFAS amounts in many samples at levels above current or proposed regulatory limits in the EU, US, or the Netherlands, with several samples containing one or more globally banned PFAS.
